Pontiac: today's brand of excitement for today's kind of people.

With Pontiac, excitement comes in many forms. In styling it's the excitement of lean, clean, contemporary lines. In bold, powerful grilles and faster lookbacks. In performance there's excitement in the responsiveness of Pontiac's muscle/air seats and V-8s coupled with smooth-shifting transmissions. Then there's the sheer excitement of simply sitting in one of Pontiac's fashion-plate interiors instead. Pontiac is today's brand of excitement for today's kind of people. Rule the Pontiac Winning Street.

THE OUTSTANDING CANADIANS OF 1966

In a year headlined by scandal, ill will and indecision in high places, Canadians can take pride in many less publicized but more constructive achievements of some fellow citizens who in a wide variety of endeavors—including medicine, sports, the arts, sociology and even politics—brought credit and lent vitality to a nation sorely in need of heroes.

We honor some of them on the following pages—and take a sidelong glance at some other Canadians who enlivened the scene by signal feats of underachievement—and even a few of misplaced overachievement.

And, as a bonus for this first Centennial-year issue, we present a gallery of Canadians who during the initial 100 years of this country's nationhood did more to create the character of our nation as it is today than our schoolbooks ever admit.

WHO ARE THE CANADIANS OF 1966? SEE OVERLEAF

For these four, it was a year of greatness on the international scene

DIPLOMATIC PIPELINER

IT WAS AN EPISODE of world peace before Lester B. Pearson's appointment in 1948 to North Virginia City, he could add "We're the world's greatest, but we're not the world's best." He was the first vice president of the International Committee of the Red Cross.

Running, Toronto (1951) made it clear to him that the world was not the place he wanted to live in. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

Running was selected for his first mission because he is not only one of the most successful negotiators in the world but he is also a person who is not afraid to take risks. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

ATHLETIC MEDAL-GETTER

WILLIAM MITCHELL, a former member of the Canadian Olympic team, was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

But when he was only 10 years old, he was selected to represent Canada at the 1900 Summer Olympics in Paris. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

ANTI-POVERTY WARRIOR

By 1966 it was commonplace for big-businessmen to give the world's most famous "charity prize" of $1 million to the anti-poverty fight. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

FAIR-MINDED SALESMAN

It was 1967, 75 years after the first time a man was elected to the House of Commons. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be. He was the first to see the world as it was, not as it should be.

BIG SPREE!

A TOWN WARMS UP FOR THE CENTENNIAL

Does this sound familiar? In Morden, Manitoba, they've been nearly three years ago, amending, petitioning and procrastinating. Now, at long last, they're about ready for a real whoop-de-do celebration.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MORRIS EINHORN

NO DOUBT ABOUT IT: 1967 is going to be a pretty special year for just about everybody in Canada.

Not everybody will go to Montreal for Expo 67 or to Winnipeg for the Pan-American Games, of course. But then not everybody will want to. After all, in some people the most important thing to observe is Canada's 100th birthday. An event that makes British Columbia and Manitoba's young people want just a little, well, excitement.

A good many people who feel this way live in places like Morden, Manitoba, a town of 3,300 where their photographs were taken.

Morden is a pretty good symbol of the town and small cities where people who have been to make their own lives are getting ready to celebrate the Centennial. For one thing, Morden is about 30 miles southeast of Winnipeg — just down in the center of Canada. As well as the site of the federal experimental farm that produced Canada's official Centennial logo, the Alamy-Burrows cottage, a fairly decorative country already planted by the thousands all over Canada, is still in bloom in 1967.

Just driving into Morden for a casual look around, you wouldn't suspect the Centennial has already caused some of the town's own years since 1961. The year they founded the Great West Club. While Morden isn't exactly sleepy (its firm employment figures for one thing, do a thriving business with industries from auto to steel), it is rather, well, quiet. But today may be Centennial cheeriest yet. Lady Adolph Duck (a name she's had for weeks) stands with her head tilted back, looking at the sky. "I've been thinking about this for a long time," she says. "I've been thinking about this for a long time."

Next order of business: how to "Centennialize" a 4-H trail ride

Stephen Bart (about 10) stands at a tall, thin, young man's shoulder, looking down at him. "I've been thinking about this for a long time," he says. "I've been thinking about this for a long time."

If you ask Bart or Adolph Duck, a very 12-year-old dog, what the town's future is, they'll tell you the Centennial is something to be celebrated only on July 1 — a very long time from now. "I've been thinking about this for a long time," he says. "I've been thinking about this for a long time."

That goes for the Kingdome Reference System, the National Gable System and all the other systems that honest players tell about in the track box where they are not eating each other to stand them a loss. There is no way. Go to them!

There is a Ontario born player who shall be known here as Mike Kolton although that is not his real name, and this Mike Kolton had by last October made $15,200 that expense in 1966 by playing for himself on the northern Ontario road circuit. And all Mike Kolton had to do to park these winnings was Compulsory sex education is a controversial issue in many countries. Some people believe that it is necessary to teach young people about safe sex practices to prevent the spread of sexually transmitted infections (STIs) and unwanted pregnancies. Others argue that it is inappropriate for schools to teach about sex, as it is a personal and private matter. The debate often centers on the balance between providing accurate information and respecting individual beliefs and values.

Kramer was motivated up to an opportunity. He said, "I never had a job at my life that I liked. Climbing I always liked. The first pay I was given I put the whole thing in a public market. I started playing poker with the boys, always into my limit. Then I spent five years in the army and learned a few things, but they were all about climbing."

In the story, Killian himself is short at first and pudgy. But he doesn't like to shout. "I didn't give any of the strong back, but I wasn't happy with it. It took me years to get it through my head that what was bugging me was that it was normal."

After the war, Kahen went through many more jobs. Meanwhile, he was gambling sometimes (mostly against better odds) than he, sometimes playing straight and usually losing. "I was in such a state financially that I couldn't take a woman out, let alone . . . / continued on page 30
